The background of the entire image is a scenic view of the ocean at sunset. The sky is filled with vibrant orange and red clouds, with the sun low on the horizon. Two seagulls are captured in flight, their white wings spread, flying from left to right across the upper left portion of the frame. The ocean below is a deep blue with visible ripples.

SYNOPSIS:

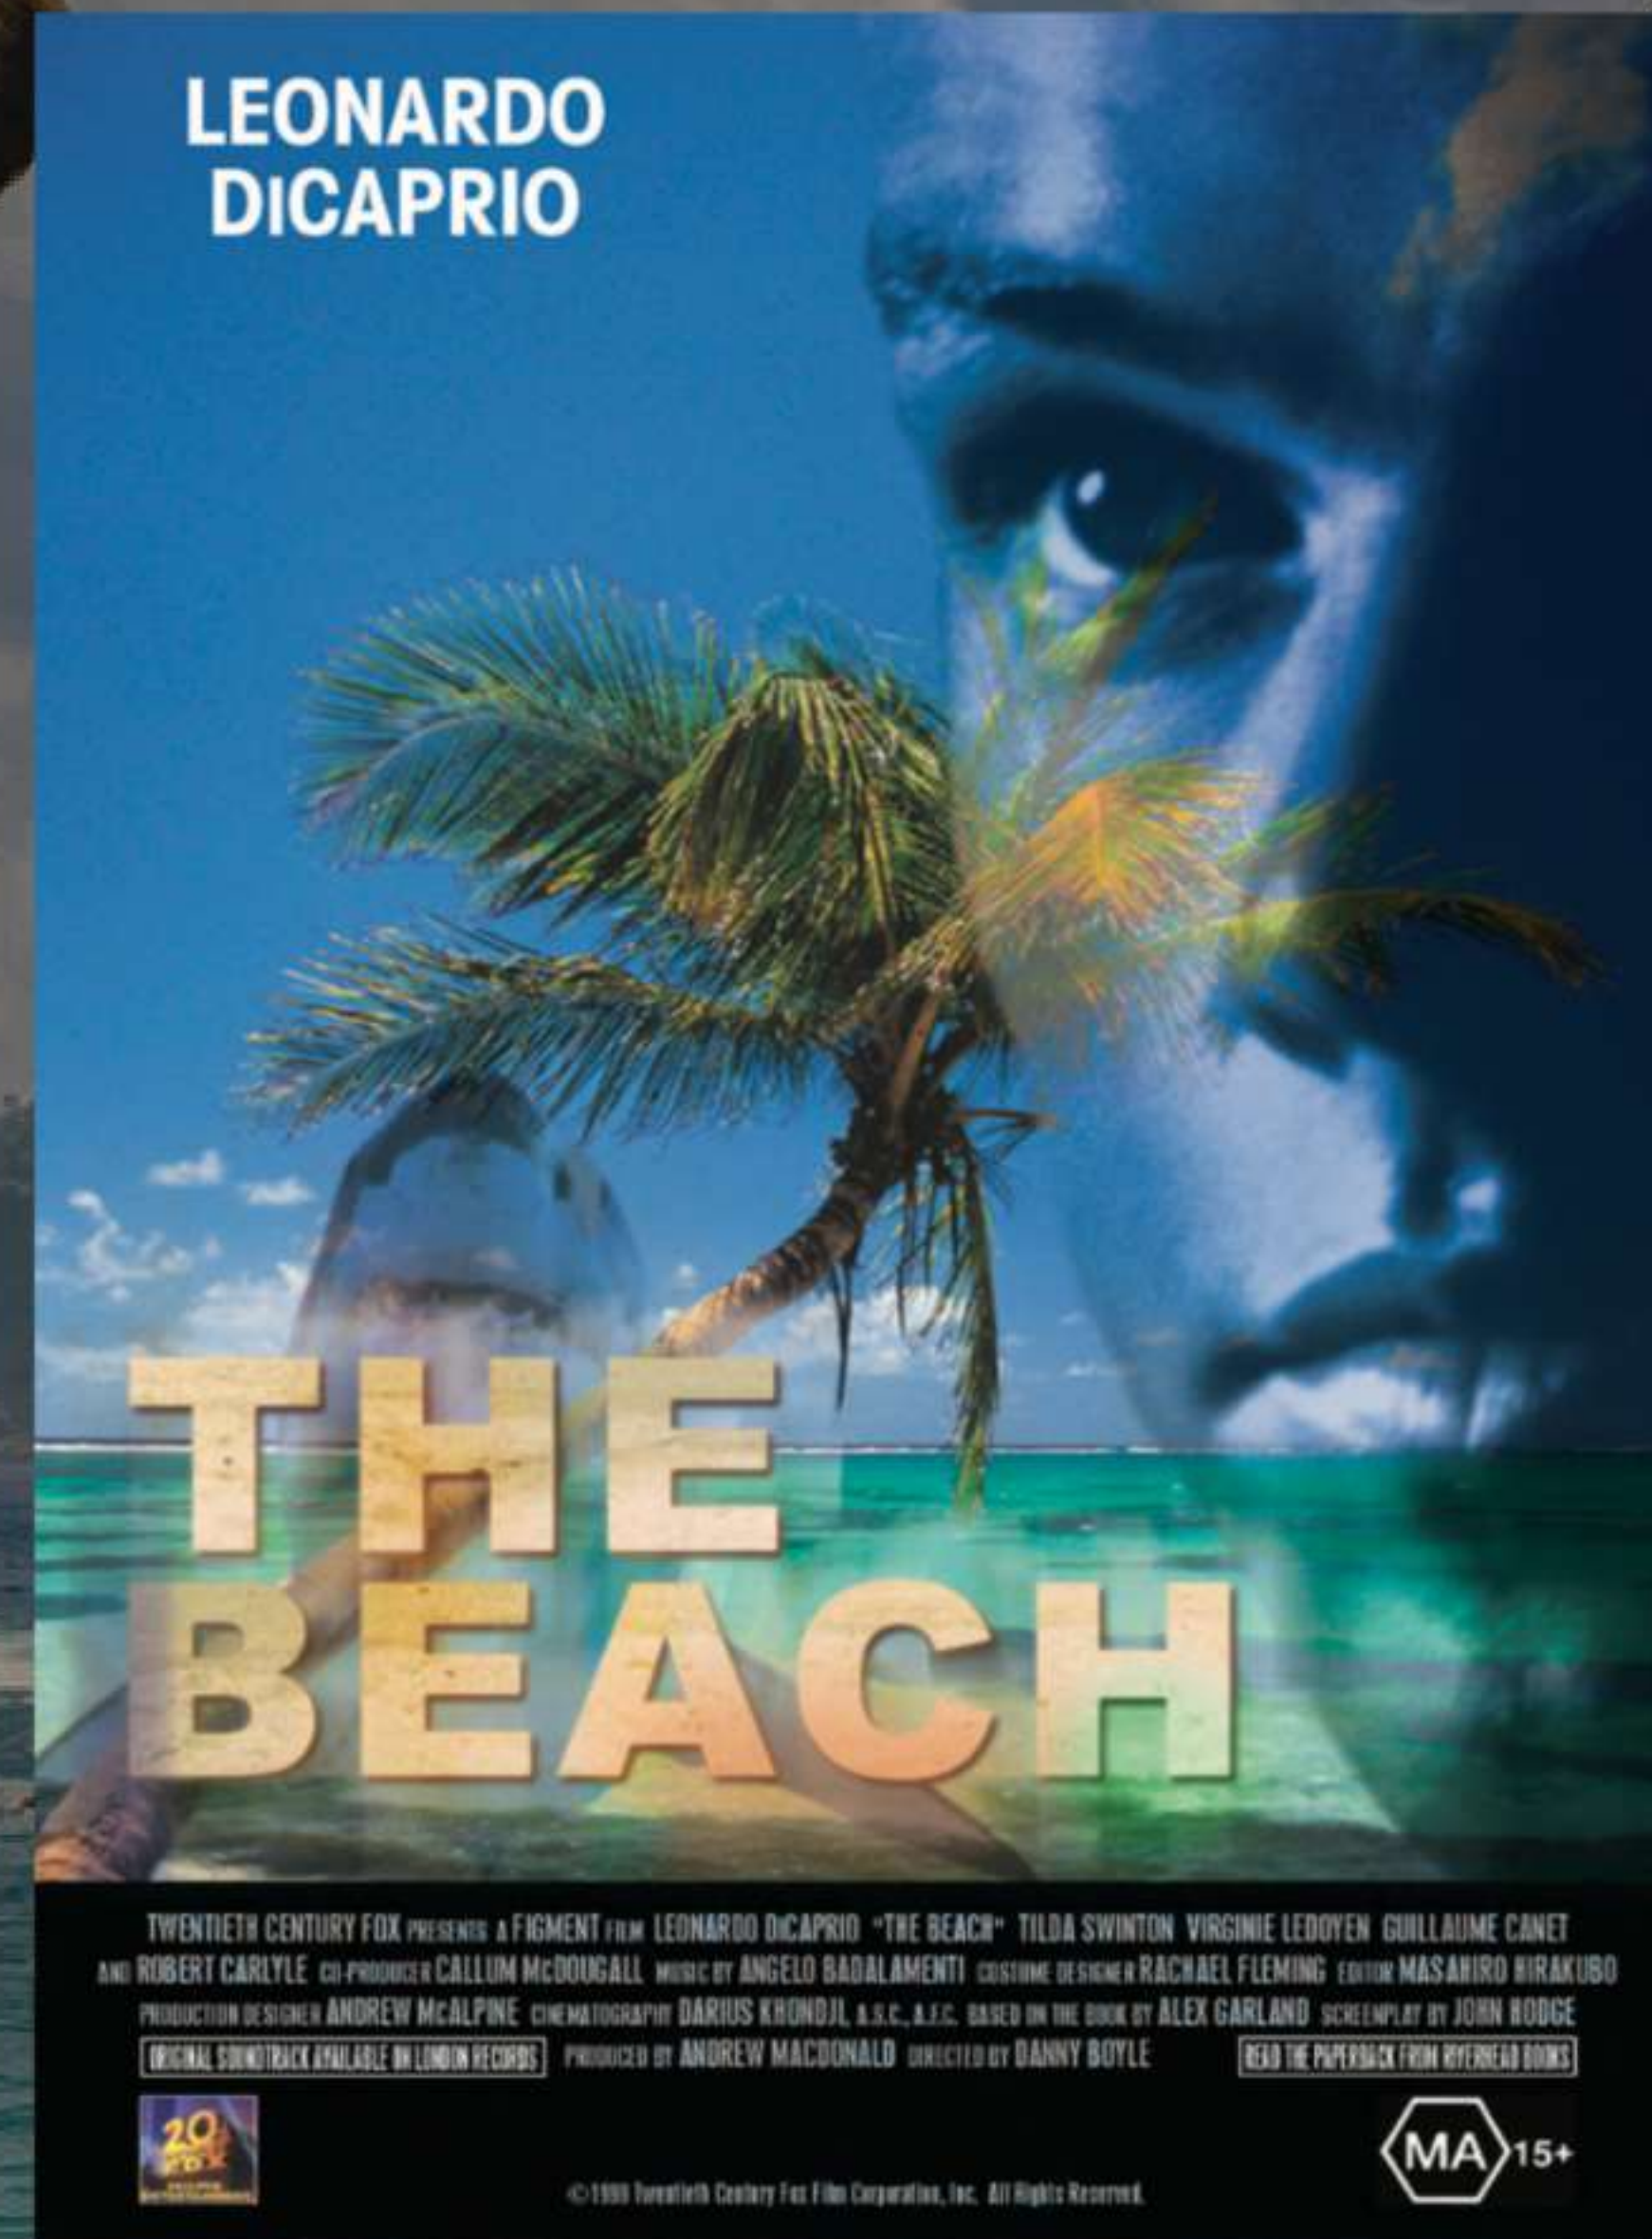

The Robinsons — William, Liz, and their children Rayne and Jack — depart Marina Del Rey on what's meant to be a meaningful family voyage to Singapore, where Jack is set to begin a semester abroad. But their journey turns deadly when a monstrous typhoon slams into their yacht, hurling them off course and marooning them on a remote, uncharted tropical island.

With no rescue in sight and their supplies dwindling, the family is forced to confront the island's brutal terrain, unpredictable wildlife, and the terrifying discovery that a crew of violent, unhinged treasure hunters uses the surrounding waters as their hunting ground. As the hunters close in to secure a hidden treasure, and hope fades, the Robinsons must transform from ordinary travelers into a united, battle-hardened family — fighting not just to survive, but to outsmart a threat that will stop at nothing to claim the island as their own.
